Report of School Board.

REMARKS.

It is not our purpose to criticise the weak points of teachers, nor shall we extol the able ones. The average of our schools is not quite as good as we would be glad to report. While some have been supplied with good instructors, others have not been so fortunate. Difficulties frequently arise in schools, sometimes the teacher may be to blame, sometimes the pupil, and frequently the parent. Some, if not all the trouble might be obviated if teacher and parent would become better acquainted.

ATTENDANCE.

The average attendance has not been as good as we would desire, some registers being badly defaced with marks of absences. Not that we should care for the defects on the page of the register, were it not for the fact that there is always a corresponding defect in the attainments of the scholar whose name stands opposite the marks.

In business life, a business man knows the importance of being punctual and regular in attention upon matters that have to do with his success. A successful business man does attend strictly to business, it is imperative that he shall or failure awaits him. A farmer cannot be a successful farmer unless he is regular in his farming, attending to every detail, laboring with hands and head. If success is attained by men and women in the affairs of every day life by the practice of punctuality, diligence and care, why not be very careful of the children and have them follow the rules we practice.

Avoidable absences have not been very numerous, but there have been enough to work detriment to the schools.

Diphtheria, real and imaginary, was the cause of a very low average attendance in the north side school; many families of the French people migrating, also helped to make a low average.

The Truant officer has been called upon several times during the year to visit homes having children out of school. This office is an important one, and the truant law should be strictly enforced in the future.

STUDIES.

In our schools the reading lessons have been read by the same scholars for quite a series of years, thus making the subjects not of great interest to the reader, and by this experience in the school room we realized the need of some measure to create an interest in the subject, and decided that the introduction of some supplementary reading matter would be the most efficient means. After examining the works of several writers Carpenter's Geographical Readers were procured and placed in the schools. These books are new and interesting, as well as instructive, have created a new interest in the reading lessons, consequently quite a number of pupils are becoming better readers.

Baldwin's Physiology has been introduced, which is a plain, simple book, useful for scholars of the age attending our schools. Commendable interest is manifest in this study. Also a new algebra have we procured for the Grammar school, District No. 2.

A habit is gaining ground in this town in regard to sending scholars from our schools to other schools. This is right, providing the boy or girl is qualified to enter the regular course of studies at the academy or seminary to which he or she may be sent. If not qualified, why not keep them in town until they are? I think the preparatory work can be done by our teachers. It has been done, and can be in the future. This is my first reason for staying at home. My second is that by taking scholars unfitted for a higher school out of our common schools and leaving others of the same grade behind that cannot or do not go tends to discouragement, loss of interest, and irregular attendance. If any advantage could be seen by the course being taken by some parents, nothing would be said, but to send pupils away from our schools that can barely read the simple lessons in English seems like a mistake.

The inquiry of the keen business man as to qualifications will always be, not what do you already know, in other words not what is your scholarship, but what is your education? How well have your faculties been developed? What control have you over the operations of your mind?

In teaching as in everything else enthusiasm is a necessary element of success. With it moderate ability will accomplish wonders, where without it great talents fail ignominiously.

In closing I will say the position you have assigned me for quite a term of years has been to me a pleasant one. The educational means have been too meagre in our schools. This I regret, but hope the new dispensation may remedy this.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES B. MARTIN.
